Last winter, my family and I visited Penang Island, Malaysia. I had always been interested in Malaysia because it is a multicultural country, where Chinese, Indian, Islamic, and traditional Malay cultures coexist with European influences. In addition, we chose Penang as our destination because it is famous for its street art, something that both my mother and I are interested in. Penang is a tropical island located off the northwest coast of Malaysia. Its capital, George Town, was built by British settlers in the late 18th century and named after King George III. As a center of trade between the East and the West, George Town has been home to a diverse population for a long time and has many beautiful, historically important buildings. For these reasons, it is listed as a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

As a result, many of the buildings on American Street have unusual appearances.

On the third day, we went to Armenian Street. (A) It is called that because many Armenian immigrants moved to this district in the 19th century. (B) However, they did not stay long, and soon Chinese traders replaced them. (C) They appear to have been designed and begun by Europeans but decorated and finished by Chinese. (D) Although there were many white buildings, some badly in need of paint, there were also many other buildings painted in yellow, pink, orange, and brick-red. (E) The colorfulness and slightly different decorations of the buildings made the whole street look really delightful.

We also saw some of Penang's famous street art on Armenian Street and more on nearby Cannon Street. I was amazed by the diverse styles of murals. ㉠Some of them were quite realistic, while others were artistically simplified or somewhat abstract. ㉡A few combined actual things such as a bicycle or a cart with painting on the wall. ㉢If you walk down the street every Saturday evening, you will come across a street market, with locals arts and crafts on display and for sale. ㉣I was also surprised to learn that these works of art were created not only by local people but also by artists from all parts of the world. ㉤A famous mural of two children riding a bicycle, for example, was created by a famous artist named Ernest Zacharevic.

On the last day of our trip, we visited the Little Penang Street Market, a street market that is held on the last Sunday of each month. It was one of the reasons why we decided to take this trip near the end of January. The Little Penang Street Market is known as the best place to see local crafts, and it really was full of beautiful ethnic goods, including clothes, shoes, wood carvings, woven baskets, and much more. The atmosphere was so lively and exciting that the entire event felt more like a small festival than a market. My parents bought a small wooden sculpture of a monkey. The seller explained that it was traditional artwork made by the Orang Asli, the inhabitants who have lived in Malaysia longer than anyone else. After having lunch at a food stall, we left for the airport.
