Many convenience stores are open 24 hours a day, 265 days a year. Since they never lock their doors, why do they bother to install doors with locks on them? It is always possible, of course, that an ① urgency could force such a store to close at least briefly. In the wake of Hurricane Katrina, for example, residents of New Orleans were forced to evacuate with little notice. But even if the possibility of closing could be ② excluded out with certainty, it is doubtful that a store would find it ③ beneficial to purchase doors without locks. The vast majority of industrial doors are sold to establishments that not open twenty-four hours a day. These establishments have ④ indefinite reasons for wanting locks on their doors. So, given that most industrial doors are sold with locks, it is probably ⑤ cheaper to make all doors the same way.
