Some experts estimate that as much as half of what we communicate is done through the way we move our bodies. (A)Paying attention to the verbal message you send can make a significant difference in your relationship with students. In general, most students are often closely tuned in to their teacher's body language. For example, when your students first enter the classroom, their initial action is to look for their teacher. (B)Think about how encouraging and supportive it is for a student when that teacher has a friendly greeting and a welcoming smile. Smiling at students — to let them know that you are glad to see them — does not require a great deal of time or effort. However, (C)it can make a significant difference in the classroom atmosphere right from the start of class.
