Painters have in principle an infinite range of colours at their disposal, especially in modern times with the chromatic ①explosion of synthetic chemistry. And yet painters don't use all the colours at once, and indeed many have used a remarkably ②restrictive selection. Mondrian limited himself mostly to the three primaries red, yellow and blue to fill his black- ruled grids, and Kasimir Malevich worked with similar self-imposed restrictions. For Yves Klein, one colour was ③enough; Franz Kline's art was typically black on white. There was nothing ④new in this: the Greeks and Romans tended to use just red, yellow, black and white. Why? It's impossible to generalize, but both in antiquity and modernity it seems likely that the ⑤expanded palette aided clarity and comprehensibility, and helped to focus attention on the components that mattered: shape and form.

Europe's first Homo sapiens lived primarily on large game, particularly reindeer. Even under ideal circumstances, hunting these fast animals with spear or bow and arrow is an ①uncertain task. The reindeer, however, had a ②weakness that mankind would mercilessly exploit: it swam poorly. While afloat, it is uniquely ③vulnerable, moving slowly with its antlers held high as it struggles to keep its nose above water. At some point, a Stone Age genius realized the enormous hunting ④advantage he would gain by being able to glide over the water's surface, and built the first boat. Once the ⑤laboriously overtaken and killed prey had been hauled aboard, getting its body back to the tribal camp would have been far easier by boat than on land. It would not have taken long for mankind to apply this advantage to other goods.

When you purchase a pair of jeans, you might evaluate the quality and prices of jeans at several different stores. At some point, though, you will decide that additional (a)[comparison / maintenance] is simply not worth the trouble. You will make a choice based on the limited information you already have. The process is similar when individuals search for a restaurant, a new car, or a roommate. They will seek to (b)[acquire / distribute] some information, but at some point, they will decide the expected benefit derived from gathering still more information is simply not worth the cost. When differences among the alternatives are (c) [important / meaningless] to decision makers, they will spend more time and effort gathering information. People are much more likely to read a consumer ratings magazine before purchasing a new automobile than they are before purchasing a new can opener.

Surveys conducted in a wide range of cultures reveal that black is seen as the color of evil and death in virtually all corners of the world. This ①negative association leads to several interesting results in the domain of professional sports. When we asked a group of respondents to rate the ②appearance of professional football uniforms, they judged those that were at least half black to be the most “bad,” “mean,” and “aggressive” looking. These ③perceptions influence, in turn, how specific actions performed by black-uniformed teams are viewed. We showed groups of trained referees one of two videotapes of the same aggressive play in a football game, one with the team wearing white and one with it wearing black. The referees who saw the black- uniformed version rated the play as much more ④favorable than those who saw the white-uniformed version. As a result of this bias, it is not surprising to learn that teams that wear black uniforms have been ⑤penalized significantly more than average.

We all agree our troubled and wounded world needs a lot of compassionate healing, right now, not when it's convenient. There is a compelling sense of (a)[confidence / urgency]. We live in a messy, complicated, frustrating, demanding world, and it is impossible to do the right thing all of the time, however we define it. Compassion is the glue that holds ecosystems, webs of nature together. We are an integral part of many beautiful, awe-inspiring, and far-reaching webs of nature, and we all suffer when these (b)[complex / simple] interrelationships are compromised. We should work for the planet because we belong to it despite our imagining and acting as if we stand apart and above nature as natural aliens. Our species was born of a world rich with animals, so we cannot flourish in one where biodiversity is (c)[protected / threatened].

One need not be a scholar of cultural change to notice that cultures have been changing more rapidly with each passing decade. Cultural change occurs at such an ①accelerated pace today that it is difficult to keep up with the latest developments. The recent revolutions in transportation and electronic communications have made the world seem ②smaller. Today it is possible to travel to the other side of the earth in a commercial airliner in about the same time it took our great-grandparents to travel fifty miles in a horse and carriage. Via satellite we can view ③instant transmissions of live newscasts from anywhere in the world. Indeed the global exchange of commodities and information is bringing the world's population ④closer to the notion of living in a global village. Because of this rapid and dramatic increase in our capacity to interact with people in other parts of the world, the likelihood of cultures diffusing has ⑤decreased dramatically in recent decades.
