Dear Jeremy,
 How have you been? I hope your senior thesis is coming along nicely. I'm sure you're quite busy with everything you have to do, but I'm confident you can handle it. You were always an excellent student with an amazing gift for writing. In fact, your name was the first to come to mind when considering candidates for the writing center. As you may already know, the student writing center offers assistance to students working on papers and other writing-related assignments. As a tutor, you would work alongside students and advise them on how to improve their writing. In return, tutors not only receive valuable teaching experience but also a decent hourly wage. If this sounds like something you might be interested in, please let me know.

I had completely forgotten he was coming until I heard the housekeepers call: "The guest has arrived!" His room was in an awful state. Hurry up! Hurry up! In a panic, I brushed the dust from my hair, my beard, and my clothes, and went to receive my guest. I tried to look as calm as if I had been resting comfortably all afternoon as I went through the shaking of hands. We dined and conversed until finally I had to show him to his room. When I saw it, I breathed a sigh of relief. The housekeepers had made it tidy enough, and if the cockroaches are quiet during the night, my guest may get a good night's rest.

20. 다음 글에서 필자가 주장하는 바로 가장 적절한 것은?

The word “natural” appears in large letters across many cans and boxes of food. But this word sometimes gives shoppers false ideas about the food inside. Even though laws require that all food labels give truthful information, this does not always happen. The word “natural” has not been defined by the FDA, the agency in charge of food labels. So any food maker can use the word on a package. Even the worst junk food is certain to have something natural in it. So the makers of these foods can use “natural” on their packages. The FDA needs to modify its current policy on food labeling and make a law requiring that the information on the package reflect the actual contents.

21. 밑줄 친 an unusual talent가 다음 글에서 의미하는 바로 가장 적절한 것은?

When he was 29 years old, William Wrigley started a business of his own. Besides unlimited enthusiasm and energy, he possessed an unusual talent. He started out selling soap. As an incentive to merchants to carry Wrigley's soap, he offered them free baking powder. When baking powder proved to be more popular than soap, he quickly switched to the baking powder business. Then Wrigley got the idea to offer merchants free chewing gum with each can of baking powder. Again, the offer was a big success. Now he decided it was time to change the company's direction. Without hesitation, he began marketing the chewing gum under his own name. Soon his product became very popular.

Is there a proper way to make new friends? Yes.
 Act as if you already have all the friends you need.
 This may seem like strange advice. But, for some reason, teens are turned off by people who seem desperate to be friends. Maybe they figure that if you want to be friends with them, there must be something wrong with you. So the trick is to have the right attitude. Totally at ease and confident. Relaxed, yet respectful. Cool, but not with rock-star arrogance. Curious, but not like a little puppy dog. Polite, but not distant. And smile enough to show that you feel good, but not so much as to suggest you're crazy. With your attitude well tuned, new friends will come easily.

23. 다음 글의 주제로 가장 적절한 것은?

We know that praise from adults can help children, but psychologists tell us inappropriate praise can also hurt them. Suppose a Little League baseball player who usually swings and misses hits a foul ball. "Good try" is sincere and appropriate praise. But a comment like "That's terrific!" sends the message that you don't think the child is capable of playing well. Too much praise for good grades can make grades seem more important than what is learned. And remember that praise for specific tasks, such as "You did a good job of putting together that puzzle," will mean more than a comment like "You're a smart girl." Encourage children by praising their efforts, but be sure your praise is sincere and constructive.

- ① pros and cons of praising children
- ② ways to develop a child's confidence
- ③ hidden messages conveyed by praise
- ④ effective methods of praising children
- ⑤ dangers of praising children too much

In this modern age of technologically driven business, it can be easy to push aside actual physical human interaction for communication via electronic devices. We email, we use social media, we text, we talk on the phone, but we often forget that all of these are missing one common component — real, face-to-face human interaction. Developing a real conversation with someone is far more difficult if you never get to speak to them face to face. When it comes to your team, you are likely going to need to develop at least a decent amount of trust for each other, so why give up face-to-face interaction when it could serve to better strengthen the bonds of trust between two people who are going to be relying on each other and working together? Avoiding in-person interaction may definitely hinder this natural process from running its course.

“Chuck wagon” was the name given to the wagon that carried food and cooking supplies for settlers traveling in wagon trains across the great plains of North America. Chuck wagons also travelled to feed cowboys or loggers in remote areas. The wagon cook had to carry enough food to last for two months through the heat of the western summer, with no refrigeration. Therefore, fresh vegetables and eggs were never carried; only dried foods could last in such conditions. A good chuck wagon cook kept his cowboys well-fed with onepot stews based on high-calorie foods such as beans, potatoes, bread, and rice. In modern times, chuck wagons are used in certain cooking competitions, events and even in a type of horse race known as “chuck wagon racing.”

Dreams don't follow the laws of logic that govern our waking reality. For example, the category of time is (A) altered / fixed. People we know who have died, we see alive; we become involved in events that actually occurred many years ago. We dream of two or more events occurring (B) simultaneously / spontaneously when in reality they could not possibly occur at the same time. And dreams also pay little attention to the laws of space. It's simple for us to move to a (C) nearby / distant place in an instant, to be in two places at once, or to fuse two persons into one. Indeed, in our dreams, we create a new world where logic has no power.

(A) (B) (C)

- ② altered simultaneously distant
- ③ altered spontaneously distant
- ④ fixed spontaneously distant
- ⑤ fixed simultaneously nearby

One way that automobiles are produced in the States is by building them in factories in Detroit. Another is by growing them in Iowa. How does that work? It's quite simple: first, a farmer in Iowa grows corn, then the corn is loaded onto a ship and shipped overseas, and soon enough the ship comes back loaded up with new foreign-made automobiles. That's why, according to economist David Friedman, auto workers in Detroit and farmers in Iowa are actually in _____ with one another. If Detroit factories receive increased government protection through tariffs and trade barriers, and it leads to decreased sales of imported cars, Iowa farmers will suffer. That's why more government assistance for car manufacturers is not necessarily in everybody's interest. [3점]

If you see two babies sitting together and smiling at each other, what is the first thing that you think about? Parents often think that they are watching an exchange of body language which would be considered a friendly greeting in older children and adults. But at this very early stage, the behavior of babies who seem to be engaged in play with one another is likely to be nothing more than imitation. That is, it is not _____. Play activities at the earliest stages of life are usually done individually, with other babies treated largely as “toys.” A smile may be an independent reaction, reflecting the amusement a baby feels at the sight of an interesting object. If a baby starts to cry, her companion will often become upset, but this is more likely to be discomfort caused by the unpleasant sound rather than genuine sympathy. [3점]

In a neurology experiment, male responses to stress were found to be the opposite of female responses, in one particular respect. The participants were first deliberately made to feel very stressed; then they were asked to judge the emotions shown by faces in pictures. There was a striking difference between the way stress affected their ability to _____.

Women became more accurate and men became worse. Activity in the “face-assessing” part of the brain slowed down in the men, indicating that stress reduces their ability to correctly assess other people’s feelings. But being stressed caused the women’s brains to light up in that “face-reading” region. This indicates that it’s an evolutionary survival impulse in women to bond with others in times of great stress. [3점]

As a result of the modernization of agriculture, the farm of today looks a lot like a factory. Food production and similar agricultural businesses have the potential to feed a nation. But not everyone is happy with the changes that have taken place on the farm. Some people say that the eggs that come from farm-factory chickens lack the flavor of the old-fashioned kind. Fruits and vegetables are no longer grown for flavor but for their ability to stand mechanical harvesting. The choice between oldfashioned flavor and modern abundance is not an easy one to make. Many people would rather keep to the old fashion, while others prefer the new ways. What is clear is that you cannot have both old-fashioned flavor and modern abundance. As a proverb goes, “_____”

Why do smaller earthquakes sometimes cause more damage than larger ones? Researchers who were training monkeys to do simple visual tasks found that success had a strong effect on the monkeys' brains.

(A) In other words, it was handicapped by its mistake. The head researcher says that success gave monkeys a surge of pleasure, thanks to a sudden increase of dopamine in the brain.

(B) For monkeys, as well as humans, this pleasure-giving chemical acts not only as a reward but also as a stimulating force that leads to further success.

After the 1988 wildfires that destroyed 739,000 acres of forest in Yellowstone National Park, researchers began studying the ecosystem to see how it recovered and changed.

(A) This phenomenon is critical to recovery, because untouched or lightly burned patches of forest re-seed destroyed areas. This is what happened after the 1988 fires.

(B) They found that, while the effects of fire vary in different ecosystems, some general principles apply. Depending on wind and available fuel, a wildfire burns in a mosaic, destroying some areas while leaving others untouched.

It is typical of these conversations that few of the remarks made on these subjects are informative.

When we are at a tea or dinner party, we all have to talk — about anything: the weather, the performance of the Chicago White Sox, Thomas Mann’s latest book, or Myrna Loy’s last picture.

(①) Nevertheless, it is regarded as “rude” to remain silent. (②) Indeed, in such matters as greetings and farewells — “Good morning,” “Lovely day,” “Do look us up the next time you’re in town” — it is regarded as a social error not to say these things. (③) There are numberless daily situations in which we talk simply because it would be impolite not to. (④) Every social group has its own form of this kind of talking. (⑤) From these social practices it is possible to infer that the prevention of silence is itself an important function of speech, and that it is completely impossible for us in society to talk only when we “have something to say.” [3점]

Alia Crum from Stanford University and her colleagues analyzed surveys from more than 60,000 American adults dating back over 20 years. The study focused on some questions: “Would you say that you are walking or biking to work more often, cleaning the house more, or taking stairs faster than other persons your age?” Using statistical models to control for factors like physical activity, age, body mass index and chronic illnesses, they then looked at the death records in 2020, which was 25 years after the first study took place. The researchers found that people who thought they performed fewer body activities than their peers were 71 percent more likely to die in that period than those who thought they did more — even when both groups had similar activity levels.

When packing for trips, professional travelers take several steps over and over until they become habits. First, they make a list of everything that they will need for the upcoming trip. They do not trust their (a) memory. They write it all down. Second, they lay out everything they are going to take with them, in advance, before packing. (b) Preparation is the mark of a professional. Third, they pack completely so that they are ready to leave for the airport well in advance of the scheduled time. Professional travelers know that if you pack in a panic because you have not allowed enough time, you will forget things that can lead to unnecessary inconveniences later on your journey. One of the techniques that you can use to travel well and increase the likelihood that you will arrive at your destination is to prepare for an (c) unexpected situation. To do this, ask yourself, "What is the worst possible thing that could happen on this trip?" For me, as a professional speaker and seminar leader, the worst thing that could happen would be for my luggage to be lost and for me to arrive without the clothes and seminar materials that I need for my speaking engagement. To guard against this situation, I put all my (d) essentials into a smaller case and carry it on board with me, never out of my sight. The larger case can be checked, but if it gets lost in transit, the loss is just a (e) disaster. Because of this habit of advance planning, I have never had an insurmountable problem because of baggage delays or losses.

Lisa loved to read. Every time her mom took her to the bookstore, she would buy two books. By the time she went to bed, Lisa had already read one of them. Mom said to Lisa the next day, "I think we need to get you your own library card. "Wow," cried Lisa. "I've always wanted a library card." The next day after school, Mom took Lisa to the library to get (a) her a card. The lady at the desk asked Mom to fill out a paper and then asked Lisa to print her name. She then told Lisa how many books she could borrow on her card. Lisa was so excited!

(B)

When Lisa got home, Mom told Lisa that a girl came to the house with (b) her library card, and she said she had found it on the sidewalk near the library. "It must have dropped out of one of the books I was carrying," said Lisa. "You were lucky that girl found your card," said Mom. "You need to be very careful. Having a library card is a big responsibility." Lisa said, "I think I will keep it in my wallet."

(C)

Mom said, "Let's go back to the library and get those books you wanted." "Sounds great," said Lisa. When they got to the library, Mom decided to get some books, too. While they were in the library, Mom told Lisa the girl that found (c) her card was sitting at the round table. Lisa went over to her and said, "Thank you for finding my card." She told Lisa (d) she was glad to help, and they both looked for some mystery books together. Lisa had her books, her card, and a new friend, too.

(D)

Lisa's favorite books were mysteries. Lisa had three books to return the next day. However, when Lisa got to the library desk, she didn't have her card. "Oh no!" Lisa said to the lady at the desk. "I can't find my library card." "I'm sorry," said the lady. "I can't let you take any books without your card."
(e) She left the library feeling very sad.
