W: In that case, we need more public art in our community.

M: I think we already have enough. It's time for us to pay more attention to the maintenance of public artwork.

W: What do you mean?

16번부터 17번까지는 두 번 들려줍니다.

[16 ~ 17] 다음을 듣고, 물음에 답하십시오.

M: Today, let's talk about jobs. Researchers predict that many of our jobs are likely to be automated within the next 20 years. Machines are getting smarter and more efficient, taking over many jobs. Here are some examples. According to recent research, the job of telemarketer has the highest chance of becoming automated. Many of today's telemarketers are not human; robots are doing the job. Another profession that can be taken over by robots is umpires and referees. For example, in professional tennis, a computerized umpire called Hawk-Eye is already being used to help the chief umpire. Restaurant cooks also have a high chance of being replaced by robots. You can see a noodle-slicing robot named Foxbot at a restaurant in China. Lastly, postal service workers including mail carriers are being affected a lot by automation. Robots are able to do tasks such as sorting and delivering mail. Now I'll show you some video clips related to today's topic.
